Module 8

My Github folder was a mess. There was no organization to it whatsoever, and my files were everywhere.

After looking at all the different files in my Github folder, I realized I had about two preferred options. One, I can put all my modules in one folder which would leave me with my coding files and design doc packet zip folder. Or two, I can figure out which modules have the most documents and just create folders for those specific assignments.

Seeing that Module 4 had 3 files, Module 5 had 6 files, and Module 6 had 9, I decided to go with option two. The different files for each of these modules weren't saved as things like "module5contactmepage" they were simply only saved as "contactmepage" so adding the specific module folders to categorize each of these documents was pretty beneficial in my case. When you have multiple parts to one assignment, things can get kind of confusing, so I like having these folders now; it makes it easier.

I originally thought it was going to take way longer editing the code as well but it ended up being a very quick process. It was definitely worth taking the time to organize my Github folder as well; now I don't feel so overwhelmed when I open it.
